Runs Into Train; Lands In Hospital

The usual occurrence is, that the train ran over pedestrian, but this time it was reversed, as Miss Dorothy White of New Lenox ran into the train.

Miss White alighted from the 10 o'clock Rock Island train coming from Chicago, Tuesday evening, and walked west on the railroad sidewalk to the Cedar Road crossing and crossed the tracks to go to her home and walked into the last coach of the train she had just gotten off. She was knocked unconscious, cut, bruised and suffering from shock. Mr. and Mrs. John Brock of New Lenox were waiting at the crossing and saw the young lady's accident and took her to the Brun's tavern where help was called.

The last coach of the train was unoccupied and therefore was not lifted.

The Joliet police ambulance took her to Silver Cross hospital where she remained until Wednesday.

Miss White, 21, is making her home with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Alexander in New Lenox while she is employed by the Association of Railroad Executives at the Union station in Chicago. Her parents live in Neoga, Ill.

FARM INCOME TAX TIME HERE

"While there are numerous changes in computing income taxes, the method of arriving at the farm net income remains the same," states Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes. "This is the big item in arriving at the Farm return. Farm returns have always been a matter of conjecture because farmers have not generally kept records. The day will come we dare say when farmers will be required to produce a rather accurate record. This crack down has already come from some offices before this time.

"Some time ago we prepared a farm income tax book. Our experience with it was not too good as farmers bought the book but made no use of it. The printer is holding these plates, which ties up a lot of metal. If there is no further demand for it it is going to be scrapped and not printed anymore. We hold about 50 unsold copies now, and if there is not more demand it goes into the discard.

"There will be assistance at the Farm Bureau on Income Taxes for farmers. Peter Heinz will be at Blue Island and Attorney Fritz at Arlington Heights with Mr. Allison part time. Farmers filing a return before January 15 do not need to file a declaration before Jan. 15 and a return before March 15. The State College of Agriculture is giving instructions on farm income taxes January 6 and which is being attended by Mr. Fritz, Mr. Heintz and his assistant, Helen Heintz and Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes. There will be no general meetings on Income Taxes this year.

Trapper Finds Body of Suicide Near Tinley Park

While Stanley Ciesielski of Harvey was trapping along 1183rd st., last Friday, his dog began barking while looking under a culvert at 183rd and 78th ave., southwest of Tinley Park and upon investigation, Mr. Ciesielski was horrified to find the body of a dead man with both the wrists and his throat slashed.

He notified the authorities and the body was removed to the Hirsch Bros., undertaking rooms in Tinley Park.

When the clothing of the victim was searched, a number of cards and a social security number were found, but no money. Thru the cards the victim was identified as William Sherman, 58, of 444 South State Street, Chicago. A union painters card showed Sherman had been working at DeKalb, Ill. No further means of locating relatives or friends was found.

At the inquest held at the Hirsch undertaking rooms the coroners jury returned a verdict of suicide.

The body was then taken to the county morgue in Chicago where it will be held for thirty days and if not claimed, it will be disposed of.

LATE AND WHY

A very heavy run of advertising and lack of help to handle all the composition required caused a delay of a day this week in getting out this issue. We aim to publish on time, but we have to cope with the limited help problem with the result that it is often times impossible to have all the material set by press time.

GRADE 3 TIRES NOW OFF THE RATION LIST

Effective Tuesday, grade 3 tires and used individual type tires were taken off the ration lists, it was announced by J. Stanley Simpson, Chief Clerk of the Joliet OPA office.

"The tires may be transferred, mounted and used without restriction," he said. "At the same time new passenger type tires made of reclaimed rubber and new passenger type 'factory seconds' previously classified as grade 3 are reclassified as grade 1 and must continue to be sold with certificates."

Action was taken to remove the grade 3 tires from rationing because the inventory has been decreasing in the last six months and their distribution is extremely spotty. The OPA hopes to encourage the purchase of grade 3 tires by this move and to save the scarce grade 1 tires for essential users.

SIXTY MILLION JOBS

One of the most significant discussions affecting the postwar world and the 60,000,000 jobs promised by Roosevelt is now taking place behind the scenes among top administrationites. It involves the price which manufacturers can charge for peacetime consumer goods when they begin making them, as some companies will shortly.

A certain amount of peacetime production already has been authorized by the War Production board, and to prevent inflation, the OPA will set the price of these goods. This is where the backstage debate has waxed hot and vehement.

On one side have been Economic Stabilizer Judge Vinson, War Mobilizer Jimmy Byrnes and for a while, OPA Administrator Chester Bowles, all arguing that prices of civilian articles produced now must not rise above the prices paid for the same articles in 1942.

On the other side are industry members of OPA, led by James Brownlee, formerly of Frankfort Distilleries, who argue that prices must be above 1942 in order to allow for increased wages and the higher cost of raw materials. They have worked out a substitute formula based upon 1941 prices plus wage increases, plus the increased cost of raw materials, and they have now sold this formula to Bowles, despite his former speeches for the 1942 price base.

Judge Vinson, however, points out that increased wage and raw material costs in many cases have been nullified by labor-saving devices. Most striking example of this was in the OPA study of the steel industry, showing that, despite increased wages, the cost of producing steel had decreased 9 per cent per unit since 1942.

Another factor influencing Economic Stabilizer Vinson is the fact that 85 per cent of the goods involved are produced by only 18 companies.

Incidentally, Vinson is supported by General Electric's Charley Wilson, formerly of the War Production board, who says that GE will sell its refrigerators and washing machines at pre-war prices. To do otherwise, he says, is "shallow, passive thinking."

Finally, Vinson, Byrnes and other administration leaders are beginning to lay the economic groundwork for the 60,000,000 jobs which Roosevelt promised after the war. And they are absolutely convinced that, in order to have a big consumer demand, there must be low prices, which in turn will keep factory wheels turning and men employed. The principle of high prices and scarcity, they argue, will mean fewer jobs and depression.

GOP PLANS FOR '48

Despite discouragement over Dewey's defeat, GOP leaders already are laying plans for 1948. First step will be further revitalization of Republican headquarters, enlistment of a cracker-jack staff to pep up party machinery.

Republican Chairman Herbert Brownell, who has been resting in Arizona, wants to resign, will call a national committee meeting shortly after the first of the year which promises to be turbulent. Several factions will be gunning for Dewey, may try to seize control of the party machinery, set the stage for "Stassen in '48."

One key man in the post-election GOP set-up is shrewd, popular publicist Lee Chesley, who joined the campaign late, is now in charge of national committee publicity. Chesley, one of the brightest press agents on the Washington scene, is anxious to slug it out toe to toe with Democratic publicist Paul Porter. Chesley's Washington predecessor, Carlisle Barger, handled publicity for the powerful Pennsylvania GOP machine during the campaign, and plans to continue working for Boss Joe Pew now that the balloting is over.

CAPITAL CRAFT

The treasury department had two war films ready to show the public in the war bond drive, calculated to bring the war really home to the American people. One showed a sailor on a stricken vessel, his clothes aflame, desperately trying to put the flames out. The other was a close-up film of a soldier on the battlefield—dying. When the films were shown to OWI, it not only ordered that they not be shown to the public, but that the films be destroyed.

Newly elected Sen. "Cowboy" Glen Taylor of Idaho is first cousin to sphinxlike Harold Dixon Young, who steers Vice President Wallace's political fortunes.

The White House got a terrific barrage from the senate when word leaked out that two Jesse Jones henchmen, plus one disciple of Democratic treasurer Ed Pauley, were to be appointed to the three-man Surplus War Property board. Senator Murray of Montana wired the President that he was shocked at the proposed appointments and would do his best to block them.

Biggest crowds in the halls of the Pentagon building these days are officers hanging around vending machines, waiting for them to be filled with cigarettes.

Japan Training Young Boys for New Wars

The blindfolded boy has been whirled about in a spinning chair. When the chair stops revolving the boy is supposed to place his pointer on a specified spot on a chart. The accuracy he displays indicates his coordination, powers of recuperation and sense of balance—his fitness to become part of the future air force of Japan.

CHRIST IN THE HOME

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 19:4-6; Luke 10:38-42; II Timothy 1:3-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—These things I command you, that ye may love one another.—John 15:17.

The American home faces many enemies and powerful destructive influences in our day. At times one wonders whether this most important of all institutions has not so far departed from what God intended it to be that it has lost its place and power.

In such a time, it is important that the Christian church keep before the people, and especially our young people, the Scripture teaching about the home. We need to revive the old-fashioned home, with its piety, purity and high purpose in the plan of God. We begin right when we note:

I. The Plan of God for the Home (Matt. 19:4-6).

When Jesus was challenged by the Pharisees, who claimed that a man had a right to divorce his wife, He appealed to Scripture. That is the sure foundation for right thinking.

He referred them to the story of the creation of man and woman in Genesis 2:18-24. There it is revealed that in all the animal kingdom there was no creature suited for fellowship with man. The one who finds full satisfaction in the company of a cat, a dog, or horse, is just not up to normal.

Adam must have a "help meet" for him, that is, one suited by personality and gifts to be his companion. God made woman for that purpose and gave her to man. Thus He established the home and ordained that all through man's history there should be the coming together of one man and one woman in that indissoluble union of love (v. 6) which makes the home.

We have forgotten God's law, or have deliberately violated it, and have broken down the home in its very foundation. We had better begin to think seriously about the divorce problem if we are not to go the way of other nations.

II. The Presence of Christ in the Home (Luke 10:38-42).

Christ repeatedly honored the home by His blessed presence. He came to the wedding feast at Cana of Galilee, and there He performed His first miracle (John 2). He should be the unseen guest at every Christian marriage. Invite Him, expect Him, honor Him, and He will bless you.

One home in particular was a place of rest and refuge for our Lord when He was here on earth, that of His friends, Lazarus, Martha and Mary, in Bethany. He was a welcome guest, always at home in that household. Shall we do less in our households? We see mottoes in homes, "Christ is the unseen guest in this home." How appropriate!

But note that His presence in the home gives Him opportunity to teach and to direct the life of the home. Mary and Martha had both been busy about the work of the household, but Mary knew when it was time to stop being busy and sit at Jesus' feet to learn and to be blessed by His presence. She not only worked, but "also sat at the Lord's feet" (v. 39). Martha went right on working until she was distracted, and came to censure her sister.

The answer of Jesus is significant. He did not rebuke Martha, He only told her to get her life into balance. There must be work in a home, but those who make home only a workshop miss its greatest blessing! Home should be a place of sweet fellowship between the members of the family, and especially between them and the Lord.

III. The Power of Faith in the Home (II Tim. 1:3-6).

Family religion really pays. The home with the family altar, where God's Word is read as a natural and proper part of daily living, where prayer is made, and God's goodness is remembered in thanksgiving and praise, that home will send forth children who know the grace of God, and are prepared to heed His call for service.

Timothy had a grandmother and a mother (one wonders where papa and grandpa were) with unfeigned faith. What a precious heritage! That was far more valuable than silver or gold, or farms or corner lots. What heritage are you giving your children?

Note the reference to Timothy's work as a minister of God in verse 6. It was by the Holy Spirit's call, and was recognized by the church in ordination, the "laying on of hands." But it is evidently closely connected with that which is spoken of in the verse before—the faith of his home. There is power in that faith to send a boy forth to valiant service for God and to keep him faithful in the day of trial. Give your boy and girl something really worthwhile to remember when they think of home. Put the power of faith in the home back of their lives in public for God.

HOMER
by CROY

© W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY THUS FAR: Amos Croy settled on a farm at Marysville, Missouri, where he married and a son, Homer, was born. Homer's earliest recollection was of a cyclone which blew down the sod barn and wrecked the orchard. Sunday meant church, company for dinner and steer weight guessing. Dehorning of the calves, curing of hams and the weaning of calves were jobs that Homer had to help with. Hog killing time meant that Homer would run the grinder while his mother added the seasoning to the sausage meat. The men would cut the meat while the women would strip the casings and soak them in salt water for sausage making. There would be enough to last the year.

CHAPTER VIII

The hardest thing of all was to get from the ground into the wagon, for the lines must be held tight and the whole thing managed slowly and artfully, for the mules would stand more or less quietly, not knowing what to make of it all. Some way or other, Newt would get in and when he was in he would ease up on the lines and then suddenly slap them—and out of the gate the wagon would go. My job was to swing on the end of the wagon and get up in it, and there we would be, Newt and the mules and I. The mules didn't like this strange monster rattling and clanking along behind them and their ears would be tossing back and forth, pretty well convinced everything was not right, but wanting to get a little better size-up of it.

Newt had a theory that no mule was any good until he had run away; couldn't trust him, he said. So he believed in taking the twig and bending it early.

Suddenly Newt would give the front of the wagon a kick and let off an ear-splitting yell. The effect this had on the mules was astonishing. Their heads would go forward and their ears would go back and down the road they would start at full speed, with the wagon rattling and swaying and leaping behind. The faster they ran the better he liked it; and so did I, although my heart was in my mouth.

We always dreaded to meet anybody, but, such is human nature, we always hoped we would.

A neighbor, jogging along in his buggy, could see us half a mile away; certainly he could hear us a mile. And when he saw the wagon tearing toward him, he would pull his team on the side of the road, then leap out and take his horses by the bits.

Past him we would go, the wagon bouncing and rattling, and the man's own horses trembling in their traces as if the crack of doom had burst in their ears. Now and then we would meet a man with a load of hogs; the poor soul would have to pull over and he and the hogs would have to take their chances. Sometimes, it seemed to me, the width of a pencil mark lay between us and the other wagon, but in some miraculous way we always got past, and would leave the hog hauler muttering frightful curses.

At last, we would come home, the brake off and the mules tired, their ears pitching hardly at all. There would be a little flurry when we tried to unhitch them, but not much. Then to the watering trough and a good feed of corn in the stable. And there Newt would stand, giving them love pats as they chomped, and talking to them as if they were children.

This wild ride was not only once, but many times each fall, for Newt bought mule colts and broke them; or he brought range mules and broke them. This was smarter than it might possibly seem, for "broke" mules brought from $10 to $20 a pair more than ungutted mules. Not only did he get the money, but he also got the fun. And the very people who had denounced him when they had seen him coming down the road, would wish they could get the fun out of things that Newt could.

I liked Newt because he liked fun and because he wrote the One-Horse Farmer. Sometimes I would think, if I were writing the One-Horse Farmer, the kind of items I would send in.

In November Phebe would say, "Aunt, don't you think it is about time to have the quilting party?" She would never say a because we had one each year.

My mother would say, "Yes, I think it is. Go ahead and get things ready."

My mother always had charge of the Sunday dinners, swimming parties, sausage making, and so on, but Phebe was the quilter in our family and Quilting Day belonged to her. She was the best quilter in the neighborhood and was immensely proud of her ability.

A thousand things had to be done. Cloth and thread and cotton had to be bought. "Homer, will you bring home some chalk?" she would say.

Word would be sent to the neighbors we were to have our quilting on a certain day, and, as the time approached, our house would get busier and busier. There would be rolls of batten and piles of cloth, and out would come the rag bag we had been keeping all year, and Phebe would hunt through it and lay out in little piles the odds and ends for the crazy quilt.

She would come to a piece and show it to my mother and their voices would fall. My mother would sit a moment, thinking, then go to the bureau in the spare room and get the wooden box that held Pa's wedding gloves and take out a piece of dress goods.

"I believe I'll put it in," she would say, her voice very low now, because the piece was part of a dress that had belonged to my sister who had died before I was born.

"Do you want to embroider her name?" Phebe would ask, and my mother would nod.

"I'll chalk it for you," Phebe would say and would go and get her style book and take the piece of chalk I had brought home from school and make a fancy capital A, and the rest of the name Alice in small letters. Ma would take her silk thread and begin to stitch along the chalk marks.

After a while Pa would come in and Ma would hold it up and he would say, "I'm glad it's going in."

In going through the rag bag, Phebe would bring out a piece, "It's part of Homer's dress. Do you want it to go in, Aunt?"

I could hardly believe I had ever been so little I had to wear a dress. But there it was.

"I want it to go in," my mother would say and in it would go, because our crazy quilt was an album of the Croy family.

The rag bag was a turning point. All year things had been going into it; if they went into it there was never any doubt about them. They were headed straight for the crazy quilt. But some things hung in the balance, still good enough to wear, but just on the verge of going into the crazy quilt.

Phebe would go to the closet in her room and bring back a dress and hold it up and say, "Aunt, do you think it ought to go in?" Ma would examine it and say, "I expect it better. Styles change so fast these days you probably can't ever use it again."

"It's the one I wore to Sister Mary's wedding," Phebe would say a little choked, because Mary had married and Phebe hadn't.

She would spread the dress on the table and cut out a piece under a pocket where it hadn't faded. "Do you want to put in anything of Blanche's?" she would say as the scissors made grating noises on the table.

"Yes," Mother would say.

"I've got something," Ma said and went to her own private box and came back with a campaign ribbon with Pierce and Breckinridge printed on it, and smoothed it with her fingers.

"Do you think it's strong enough?"

"I'll stitch a back on it," Phebe said.

"Then I'd like it to go in."

The day before the quilting, Phebe would say, "Homer, I want you to wash off the frames." More work for me. Always more work for me. That's the way it seemed.

I would go to the smokehouse and get out the wooden frames. Two X's made the end pieces; when set up they were held together by two poles which were two or three feet longer than the average quilt. I would get a bucket of soap and water and begin to scrub the frames, but no sooner would I start than Phebe would come trotting out.

"Now don't you go and wet the edging." The "edging" was a piece of ducking about twice as wide as my hand which ran the length of each pole; to this the quilt was sewed while it was in process of construction. I would have to scrub the poles carefully so as not to get the edging wet. More work. I didn't have to be so careful with the X's. I could give them a slob of water and a few quick rubs and be through. "Now you can lean them against the fence and let 'em dry." I would lean them promptly.

We'd be up early on the day of the quilting, and a kind of excitement would vibrate over the house. I liked it, even if it meant extra work.

"Homer, I want you to get the stove going," Phebe would say. More work.

Sometimes the parlor wouldn't be used all winter. But it was on Quilting Day. If a woman had her quilting in her everyday living room, she'd have to have a pretty good excuse or be talked about.

By nine o'clock the first buggy would show up, then a surrey would appear, because it wouldn't do to go in a wagon on a stylish day like a quilting; pretty soon, Mrs. Gerilda Knabb would come over the brow of the hill in her sidesaddle, and I would have to dash out and hold her horse close to a surrey step so she could get down.

Haying and threshing and clover-seed hulling and road-work day belonged to the men. But Quilting Day belonged to the women. It was all right for a man to deliver his wife at a quilting, but he had to get away as fast as he could. If he went to the house and sat down with the womenfolk and tried to be sociable, they'd have run him out with brooms. No man in his right mind would go near the house.

It wasn't proper for the women to sit around and visit; get right down to work, because work was more important than manners. It was a tremendous honor to be the first woman at the frames.

There, in the middle of the floor, would be the frames with the quilt-to-be strung between them, and with cotton batten between the two lengths of cloth. The cloth would be stitched to the edging, but the quilt hadn't been tightened. When all was ready, one woman would take hold of one ratchet wheel and another woman would take hold of the other ratchet wheel and Phebe would dash up and down the frames giving the cotton the last smoothing out, then she would say, "Tighten!" and the women would begin twisting the ratchet wheels. A wooden tongue fitted into the teeth of a wheel and each time the tongue fell it gave a click. It was a hard job to get the quilt started just right, because if it was slewed, the whole thing would be collywobbled and no amount of work would ever get it straight. So Phebe would dash up and down the frames, tightening pins and loosening threads, and having one woman tighten and another loosen until the quilt was finally squared on exactly right. "Fasten!" she would order, and the women would push the wooden tongues down so they wouldn't fly loose and cause no end of trouble.

Phebe was the leader. They all asked her how she wanted this done, or how she wanted that. She would tell them, now and then stopping to show how she turned a corner, or put in a rabbit ear. Ma wasn't important today.

When the row of white lines was finished, Phebe would say, "I guess we can turn now." The women would go to the ratchet wheels and Phebe would say, "Roll," and the ratchet wheels would move and the little wooden tongues click; then the women would go back and take up their needles.

The other women would be in the sitting room visiting, or helping Ma in the kitchen. But that was only until the quilters got tired. Now and then one of the women from the sitting room would get up and go to the frames and say, "I expect you're tired, Mrs. Kennedy. I'll take your place for a while."

Mrs. Kennedy would say she wasn't in the least tired, but in a minute the new woman would be at the frames and Mrs. Kennedy would be in the sitting room visiting.

On other days the polite thing was for everybody to sit down to dinner at the same time, but not on Quilting Day. The frames must be kept turning. The women who were not quilting would eat, then go to the frames; those who had been quilting, would go to the table. Not much to eat, but one expected fancy things, because today was workday. Get as much done as possible.

After while we'd see Pa coming through the yard; then we'd hear him on the back porch taking off his overshoes. He'd sit down at the table, but there'd be no grace. He'd gulp down his food and get out of the house as fast as a tramp.

After dinner the women would get sleepy and the chatter would fall off; now and then one would hold her hand, with a thimble on the middle finger, up to her mouth and try to hide a yawn. Then she'd say, "I was up with a calf last night," and everybody'd understand.

Now and then one of the women, without a word, would get up and leave the frames and put a fascinator over her head. We'd all know what that meant. When she came back in she'd hold her hands over the stove and say, "It's getting real chilly outside."

Finally the quilt would be done and Phebe would say, "We can take it off now." Back the other way the ratchet wheels would go and the quilt would sag in the middle from its weight, then it would be unstitched and unpinned from the edging. Phebe would hold it up and all would examine it to see who had made the best diamonds. "Now the crazy quilt."

Gay Accessories Made of Felt

MAKE this season the gayest ever—for accessories! Get out those old felt hats... cut 'em up into beanies, belts, lapel ornaments, slippers.

To prevent the gloss from coming off white paint, wash with milk and very little soap.

Prevent picture marks on the walls by placing thumb tacks in each of the lower corners of the frame. Let tacks extend partly, keeping frame from wall.

Never leave pieces of cut-up chicken in water. Some of the good juices and excellent flavor leaches out and is lost.

Boil the wick of a kerosene lamp in vinegar before using to keep it from smoking.

When turning the mattress, also turn it around, that is, place the end that was at the head of the bed at the foot.

Place a handful of starch in the water when washing tile floors. It will leave a nice shine.

If the leg of an old stocking is cut and stretched over the new broom down to a short distance above the end of the straws, it will prevent broom from wearing out so quickly and at the same time make it better for sweeping.

You'll have lots of fun making felt "gee-gaws." Instructions 706 contain patterns of all pieces; directions for articles shown.

Due to an unusually large demand and current war conditions, slightly more time is required in filling orders for a few of the most popular pattern numbers. Send your order to:

So the Little Man Wasn't Going to Disobey Now!

An eastern potentate, who wanted to know how many men were afraid of their wives, sent for all his married subjects and commanded those who always obeyed their wives to stand on one side.

Promptly the crowd stepped over. That is—all but one man.

Seeing to his surprise that it was a very small fellow who stood apart from the others, the potentate asked him why such a puny individual as himself had a mind of his own.

"When I left home, your Majesty," explained the diminutive man, "I promised my wife that I would not go in any crowd."

Thursday morning, 9:15 a.m.

Dear Folks:

Well I believe its about time I write you again, but during the past few weeks we have been preparing for our final two weeks of training. They will be spent out in the field. We will have to sleep in pup tents as we would in actual combat. During this time we will be given certain tests to see if we have fulfilled the full training of a combat infantryman. So I hope I make everything with flying colors.

Before I go any farther I want to wish you folks and your family a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. If things come out the way they should I hope to be home around the holidays. But one can't plan to far ahead in the Army.

From all reports I hear the weather is quite cold up there. It got down to about 30 degrees here two nights ago. Its time to close for now. Say Hello to the neighbors.

Your friend,

Gordon

Dear Ladies:

Received your pkg. of fudge the other day and I want to thank you very much. It sure was good and my buddies and I enjoyed it very much. It is very cold out today and the ground is covered with snow. The scenery is beautiful if a fellow could only appreciate it.

Have been very busy of late. Just the other day I shaved off ten days growth. If those whiskers could talk they could give you an idea of what living hell is like. Sure was rugged.

Haven't much time now, so will have to bring this to a close already. Again I wish to thank you for the fudge. Til later. I'll say goodbye. Bob

This one is from the other side of the World. From Pfc. Walter Hentsch in Hawaii.

Dear Friends:

I received a pkg. from you last week and haven't had a chance to give my thanks. I want to thank you all, a thousand times for everything. It sure was swell. If you could of only seen that can of chicken! When we opened it all I saw was forks, no chicken. Everything you sent was put in use.

All we got to do is hope and pray for this war to come to an end. If everyone would only believe and trust in the Lord, it would be over soon.

We had a good Thanksgiving Day dinner, but not enough Turkey. Just a taste, that's all.

I know that everyone in service that received their box sure did enjoy it. I want to thank you again for everything and Christmas greetings to all. Its time for lights out, so I will have to hit the hay.

Sincerely,

Walter

PACKED crowds jamming the stadiums wherever Notre Dame has played this season reminds one again of the record crowds Notre Dame has drawn for the last 20 years in football. There has been nothing in sport to match the crowd appeal Notre Dame carries, no matter where the game is played.

To keep an attendance record at such high mark for 20 years is something beyond the tale of the book. In those years, I can recall a crowd as high as 101,000 for a Notre Dame-Southern California game in the big Los Angeles Municipal stadium. Certainly Notre Dame would draw another capacity gathering at Los Angeles this fall if extended travel restrictions hadn't ended the old rivalry for the time being. This season again, Notre Dame has played to capacity in practically every one of her games.

Grantland Rice

In just three games, including the army clash, the South Bend troops added up a count of some 200,000 at Urbana, Baltimore and New York. It was packed-house business in each place—with many, many thousands unable to buy tickets. "Sold out" is usually the message weeks ahead when Notre Dame plays, wherever she plays.

Notre Dame's ten games passed the 500,000 mark, and lack of seating space is the only thing that keeps this count from beating the million mark.

Color's the Answer

You might ask just why this is so. The answer is simple enough. It began under the colorful leadership of Knute Rockne, plus the influence of Notre Dame's faculty.

The crowd long ago began to sense the fact that Notre Dame teams not only played fine football, but they were teams that gave the game spirit and sportsmanship.

From the Four Horsemen and the Seven Mules to the 1944 team, Notre Dame has given the crowd what it wanted to see. In the last 20 years I've seen Notre Dame beaten, but I've never seen a dull Notre Dame team.

I'll admit that through most of this period Notre Dame has had the jump in material. Good, young football players want to go to Notre Dame, for Notre Dame has the big edge in national headlines. Yet Notre Dame plays in no bowl games, no post-season games, and you might be surprised to know how many young or budding stars pick colleges who might be eligible for one of the big bowls.

No one can question the fact that through the last ten years Notre Dame has meant the top in football to millions, to more millions than any other team.

How About the Others?

What about Minnesota's many great teams? What about Michigan or Ohio State? In the main these teams stick to the Middle West. They have had teams better than Notre Dame. But Notre Dame covers the football map. The roving Irish may play in Los Angeles or in New York. They come to Baltimore. They invade Atlanta. They take on all comers. They cover no restricted territory. And if you look over their record you'll know Notre Dame has done better than just average. Navy finally won, and then Army, after waiting many years. Until this year's 59-0 victory, good Army teams hadn't won from Notre Dame since 1931, a matter of 13 years ago. Army hadn't scored on Notre Dame in the last five seasons.

Notre Dame's one big pitfall was Pittsburgh under Jock Sutherland. The Big Scot had the whip hand over Notre Dame, winning year after year. But in the last decade Jock's Panthers were the only opponents who kept on winning from the South Bend bunch.

It must be admitted, however, that in the way of color, spirit, sportsmanship and skill, Notre Dame has deserved its place as the big drawing card of football. On the winning side, against college teams, you'll find in the three years preceding this season, for one example that Notre Dame has lost only two games, if our memory remains. Those college victories go to Michigan and Georgia Tech. But win or lose, the South Bend Simoon keeps packing them in. And probably will do so, year after year.

Bookies vs. Machines

"I'd say," one veteran bookmaker told me, "we gave the players at least 100 per cent the best of it over these mutuel machines. We know our day is over, so far as setting prices are concerned."

"As everyone knows, outside bookmakers still keep busy. With $400,000,000 handled at New York tracks, at least $250,000,000 is handled away from the tracks. There would be no such betting as this under the old bookmaker system."

Soil Fertility Is Essential to Food

Fertilizers Help to Increase Value of Acre

Agriculture, in all its forms, rests upon the basis of soil fertility. Whatever renews or increases that fertility benefits the farmer and those dependent upon him for food, clothing and essential articles from farm commodities.

War Food administration reports show that the planting of millions of additional acres in crops has been avoided during the war years, by increased use of fertilizer, resulting in marked increases in yield.

It has been determined that two extra bales of cotton were produced per ton of fertilizer; 125 extra bushels of corn; 85 bushels of wheat; 185 bushels of potatoes; and 140 bushels of oats.

On a group of West Virginia farms, forage production was reported increased 57 per cent from the use of a ton of ground limestone and 180 pounds of triple superphosphate per acre. Protein content of the forage increased more than 40 per cent.

Winter legume cover crops on which fertilizer was used showed increased growth, which was reflected in larger yields of succeeding crops benefitting from turning under the green manure. An average increase of more than 11 bushels of corn per acre was reported from plantings immediately following the vetch, without the use of additional fertilizer.

Increases in alfalfa hay yields from fertilizing the soil were reported as 33 per cent in the north-eastern states; 25 per cent in the east central area; 40 per cent in the south; and 15 per cent in the north central and western regions.

How to Keep Poultry Flock in Good Health

Proper location of the poultry house will do much toward keeping a flock healthy. The poultry quarters should be on light, sandy well-drained soil and should be provided with some shade. The house should face opposite the direction from which storms usually come.

Clean, comfortable, well-ventilated and spacious poultry houses, abundant and nourishing feeds, and clean water in clean receptacles help keep fowls in good physical condition; when these things are provided, no medicine is needed to keep poultry well and productive. Without such provisions, no medicinal treatment will insure the maintenance of health. It usually pays to kill, not doctor sick hens.

New Farm Facts

A new apricot developed by Russians contains 50 per cent sugar when tree dried.

Proper care of tractor this winter, together with correct adjustment may mean a saving in fuel of from 13 to 26 per cent next season.

Small dried peas, 3,000 years old, taken from the tomb of King Tut-an-khamen have been planted in Florida by an army officer and produced a good crop.

Shortage of certain small grain seeds for next year looks possible. Proper handling this year will assure the farmer of sufficient seeds for planting later on.

When ordinary fly sprays have been used in barns or other buildings, avoid breathing the fumes for long periods of time. The fumes are also detrimental to livestock.

Calf Vaccination

While calf vaccination for brucellosis is not a substitute for proper management and sanitation, it is recommended by Dr. R. R. Birch of the American Veterinary Medical association. Calfhood vaccination, accompanied by a program of elimination of reactor animals, has been responsible for the greatest amount of progress in brucellosis control during the past year. The vaccinated calves, however, should be removed from those not vaccinated.

IT SOUNDED THE SAME

An army chaplain took exception to the contention that mules cannot be successfully driven without blasphemy. Army mule skimmers are famous for their "fluency" in this line, and when the chaplain took issue with them they challenged him to prove his case.

The chaplain cracked his whip, cleared his throat, and in roaring tones addressed the animals: "You rapturous archangels! You sublimated cherubim! You sanctified innocents! Get ye up and hence!"

The results were astoundingly good, for the mules gathered themselves together and moved off.

Musicians Are the Funniest People:

Adelina Patti asked $100,000 for a certain three-month tour. "But," objected an impresario, "that's more than the President gets!" "Well," shrugged the diva, "then get the President." . . . Liszt was a character who wore the same kind of clothes whether the weather was rainy or fair. . . . "I never," he declared, "take notice of that which takes no notice of me." . . . Handel composed so fast, they say, that the ink on the top of the page of his manuscript had not dried by the time he reached the bottom. . . . Another gag of the day: "Do you like Brahms?" . . . "I don't know. What are they?" . . . "After Strauss—what?" an English journalist once queried. "For one thing," music oracle Leonard Leibling noted, "the critics."

A journalist objected to the 7 a. m. piano playing in the room next to his in a Milan hotel. "Do you always allow that?" he asked. . . . "Not as a rule," they told him, "but we make an exception with Mr. Verdi." . . . It was the late Alexander Woolcott who deflated a famous soprano boasting of her execution of an aria she described as "difficult." . . . "Difficult!" groaned Woolcott. "I wish it had been impossible!" . . . At a Peabody concert President Grant once observed: "I know only two tunes. One is 'Yankee Doodle' and the other isn't."

When Rossini heard Wagner's "Lohengrin" for the first time, he said: "One cannot judge a work upon a single hearing—and I have no intention of hearing this a second time." . . .

A German critic once wrote that "Wagner was a good musician, but he left behind the Wagnerites, which was most unkind of him." . . . "In order to compose," said Schumann, "it is just enough to remember a tune which nobody else has thought of." . . . When Albert Spaulding toured through the West one Winter, he told a theater manager that his violin was 200 years old. . . . "Don't say anything about it," replied the impresario, "and maybe the audience won't know the difference."

Paderewski, when still quite unknown, went to London armed with letters of introduction to influential Britishers. "Dear Prince," one said, "the bearer, Ignace Paderewski, is a fiery young Pole and rather charming when he doesn't play the piano, for which he has little talent." . . . Paderewski, unless a press agent of the day is fooling us, once accosted a polo player with the question: "What is the difference between us?" The other shrugged. "You," grinned Ignace, "are a good soul who plays polo. I am a good Pole who plays solo." . . . Grunfeld was caught by the father of one of his pupils kissing the girl. "Is this," stormed the parent, "what I am paying for?" . . . "No," replied the famous tutor, "I do this free."

A young man approached Mozart and asked him how to write a symphony. "You're a very young fellow," the composer told him, "why not begin with a ballad?" . . . "But," pouted the youth, "you composed symphonies when you were ten." . . . "Yes," smiled Mozart, "but I didn't ask how." . . . Dr. Samuel Johnson admitted once he did not care for music. "But of all noises," he added, "I think music is the least disagreeable." . . . A young lady auditioned on the piano for Rubinstein. "What," she asked him at the end of the selection, "should I do now?" Snapped Rubinstein: "Get married!"

Chopin, whose life Columbia brings to the screen in "A Song to Remember," could give more than the piano "the finger." He was a dinner guest in a Parisian home one night and, after the meal, was asked by the hostess to play some of his compositions. "But, madame," said Chopin, "I have eaten so little!" . . . He once cracked to Liszt: "I prefer not to play in public; it unnerves me. You, if you cannot charm the audience, can at least astonish them." . . . When DePachman mislaid his false teeth someone appropriately observed: "His Bach is better than his bite." . . . To a young pianist, Nellie Melba remarked: "You have talent, presence, charm. All you need now to make a success is a nice hot scandal."

Mascagni heard an organ grinder murdering an aria from his famous "Cavalleria Rusticana" and ran out of his house to show him the proper speed to crank out the melody. Next day the organ grinder carried a sign on the organ: "Pupil of Mascagni." . . . Liszt paid women 25 francs to faint at an appointed time (a swoonster!). He would promptly and gallantly dash from his keyboard and pick up the swoonee. Once, a hired fainter forgot her cue and Liszt, very upset, swooned himself.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The size of the country's synthetic rubber production may depend not only upon technical progress, but also upon policies adopted for disposal of government-owned plants, in the opinion of John L. Collyer, president of The B. F. Goodrich Company and a pioneer in synthetic development.

Authorities expect that about 32,500 tons of natural rubber will reach the U. S. from the Amazonian region this year. Our synthetic program is now geared to produce 836,000 long tons a year of this substitute for crude.

POSTWAR PROGRAM OF TELEPHONE COMPANY

A joint committee of representatives of Bell and Independent Operating Telephone Companies throughout the United States has been formed to advance the nation wide postwar programs which the various telephone companies have been working on individually to extend and improve farm telephone service, it was announced today.

Co-Chairmen of the committee are John P. Boylan, President of the United States Independent Telephone Association, the national organization of the thousands of independent telephone companies, and Keith S. McHugh, Vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, representing the Bell Operating Companies.

Rural telephone service is more highly developed in this country, under the American system of private enterprise, than in any other country in the world," Mr. Boylan and Mr. McHugh said today in a statement issued by them for the committee. "However, it is by no means as highly developed as we in the industry want to see it, and the industry intends to do everything in its power to provide more service, and better service, at a cost which the farmer can afford."

Since operating telephone companies through out the whole country have been working on this problem, a representative joint committee has been formed consisting of a number of their most experienced officials. We believe that the application of new facilities and methods which were under development by the industry before the demands of war interrupted our research and construction program will help to bring telephone service to many new farm customers. As soon as war demands are reduced, we propose to resume and expand our research effort and, along with it, the intensive program for extending farm service which was being carried on before the outbreak of hostilities.

Over one half million miles of telephone pole lines serving rural areas have already been built so that more than two-thirds of all rural families in the United States can be served from existing lines. Since 1935 more than 500,000 additional families in rural areas have become telephone subscribers—an increase of 35 percent. One of the major objectives is to continue this upward trend by making the service over existing lines increasingly valuable and attractive. This the industry intends to do to the limit of its ability.

A second major objective is to extend service at reasonable cost to families not now reached by existing lines. Telephone industry research in the last several years has successfully developed new construction materials and methods which substantially lower the cost of building wire lines to areas not previously reached. In addition, work was started by the industry in 1938 to develop a practical system of transmitting telephone conversations over electric power lines. A similar system can be used over telephone lines to increase their capacity. This so called rural carrier system transmits a very high frequency current over the wires. From 1940 on, experiments with this system for telephone service over rural power lines were carried forward in a cooperative effort of Bell Telephone Laboratories and the Rural Electrification Administration. Before this work was interrupted by the war, it was clear that a suitable system of this kind could be produced.

One practical effect of these developments is to make it physically possible to furnish telephone service wherever there are rural power lines and no telephone lines. The Telephone Companies plan, in cooperation with REA Cooperatives and with power companies serving rural territory, to determine the full extent to which rural carrier telephone service can be used economically and effectively.

The telephone companies also plan to study the possible application of microwave radio systems to rural telephone service and to make use of this and any other new methods which will be helpful in serving the farmer."

There is a Telephone where I am living...
Can you connect it for me?

This question is sometimes asked by newcomers—and by others who have not had telephones here—when they move into a home just vacated by another family and find the telephone still in place. They are apt to wonder why a telephone man soon arrives to remove the instrument and why they then have to wait before getting telephone service.

The answer is that many other applicants have already been waiting for telephone service . . . perhaps for weeks or even months.

So, the telephone used by former residents who order their service terminated—the wires to the central office—the switchboard outlet and all other equipment required to keep a telephone in use are assigned to the family next on our waiting list.

We appreciate the patience and understanding shown by those who have had to wait. And you may be sure that we are doing everything in our power to s-t-r-e-t-c-h all our facilities to give the best service to the most people.

Nov. 19, 1944

Dear Editor:

I receive the Mokena News-Bulletin and I wish to inform you of an address change. I just returned from a trip and got the papers. I really enjoy reading it as it reminds me of the old home town.

Yours truly,
Wm. Kokal, AMM 2-c, care Fleet postoffice, New York.

Somewhere in Germany
Nov. 7, 1944

My dear Mr. Semmler:

It sure takes me a long time to thank you for your kindness in sending me the News-Bulletin but I do wish to do so now, as I have been receiving the paper on the Pacific side for almost two years and now I'm receiving it right in Germany, so this newspaper has done some traveling from its home town.

Your paper is sure being built up as I remember when it was a two page affair and now with new housing additions springing up, it turns out to be four pages of good reading all the latest news from around home and vicinity and that surely, boosts any Serviceman's morale.

So far we have experienced peace and quiet on this portion of the Western front. Oh a little excitement occasionally, but not for long.

Speaking of morale boosters, one is the Hometown newspaper, another is the local chapters of the USO who are doing a great deal by sending soldiers candy and cigarettes, but the main point is that the soldiers know that someone is thinking about them in their own home towns and this makes the soldiers exclaim that "We are going back home" and that statement means more than anything else or anything that I can write in this letter.

My home town happens to be New Lenox and I'll say the same as other soldiers say: that I also will come home as soon as my service is completed.

The people here in Germany are vastly different than those in France, Belgium and Holland, there we were acclaimed as saviors and liberators, here they smile, a very peculiar smile, friendly; yes, enemies still and that makes us more vigilant in our operations.

Well Mr. Semmler again I wish to thank you and when my family and I return to live at New Lenox, why you can send me your newspaper as I would like to be your Number 1 Post War Subscriber.

Also wishing you and your paper success and a Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year.

I remain,
Stephen B. Sitar, Lt., care postmaster: New York.
This happens to be German stationery.

VILLAGES ARE POTENT PART OF AMERICA

Gloom prophets have frequently asserted in recent years that American villages were disappearing. They claimed the day was close at hand to "count 10" over the places of 2,500 inhabitants or less with their friendly, tree shaded main streets and bustling, local enterprises. But an analysis of Census figures for the 1930-40 period gives an entirely different picture. All indications are that the American village, a bulwark stone of our social order, with its stores, shops, services, schools and churches is in a flourishing condition.

Rural sociologists stresses the point that the tendency of villages to grow or remain reasonably stabilized is a fact confirmed by the experience of the last half century. In 1930 there were 13,421 villages in the United States. The net loss of 154 communities in the figure for 1940 means little because 316 villages grew into town category. For all practical purposes a place of 3,000 is still a village, but for statistical purposes a line has to be drawn. In the decade, 486 new names became villages and 40 towns became villages; 364 village names disappeared because they were incorporated, joined with another center, or disappeared for unknown reasons.

The chances are that village life will grow stronger and more flourishing in the postwar years. Many city families will move to villages within commuting distance of the larger centers. There is a definite trend for large city centers to establish branches in places where it is more pleasant to shop. There's no chance for Goldsmith's Deserted Village to become commonplace here. As we learn how to live in a modern world, more people will choose the peace and friendliness of village life.

THE DOCTORS COME THROUGH

A leading women's magazine carried an inconspicuous item the other day, observing that "there have been no serious epidemics and no increases in child mortality." That brief item appearing after three years of war and with 50,000 physicians away in the armed forces, is a telling commentary on the calibre of work being done by the doctors on the home front.

Three years ago medicine went about its task amid wails of "doctor shortage". Elderly physicians came out of retirement to help in the pinch. Every day, 24 hours a day, thousands of doctors labored without thought to self to pull the country through the war without a letdown in our high health standards. Vacations have been unknown and the "hours on the job" of the average doctor would appall a union official.

There are signs (although we should still knock on wood) that this titanic effort of the doctors is beginning to pay off. However, from now until peace finally comes, the medical men will need the fullest public cooperation. Such cooperation has been invaluable thus far in the emergency, and will continue to be to the end. So, remember what the doctors have done for all of us in these past three years, and help to make the burden easier for your doctor when you can.

Give him a crisp WAR BOND for a CHRISTMAS present to be remembered. Keep on BACKING THE ATTACK.

Congratulations and Cup are presented to Norman Jorstad, whose brooder-raised Chester Whites took 3 "Firsts" at the Chicago Junior Hog Show. In addition to having champion single hog, Norman won top honors in the pen of three and pen of five competition. B. F. Heide made the Pillsbury Award presentation.

ELECTRIC PIG-BROODERS

gave my champion hogs
a healthier start

says NORMAN JORSTAD,

Chicago Jr. Hog Show Winner

Good authority on hog raising is 16-year-old Norman Jorstad of Morris, who has a head full of pay-off ideas when it comes to producing money-making pigs.

"Good management, proper housing, balanced feeding, and plenty of care and work helped make my Chester Whites winners", says Norman, "but before these came the matter of saving them when they were farrowed—and that's where my home-made brooders came in. Brooders were just what I needed to get my baby pigs off to a healthier, flying start...to give them the protective warmth they needed during their first critical weeks. The more you eliminate the element of luck after pigs are born, the greater the number that will grow to maturity and be marketed."

Here are Plans

for a low-cost, easy-to-make brooder that will provide both heat and a protected area for your baby pigs. Nail one or more of these brooders together now—be ready to cut pig losses resulting from killing cold or from baby pigs being lain on or trampled.

MATERIALS NEEDED:

- | | | |
|--|---------|---|
| 1-1" x 8" x 4" piece lumber | } sides | 1-12" square piece hardware cloth |
| 1-1" x 12" x 7" " | | 1-1 gallon can for reflector—be sure to fix can at least 1" above cloth |

A Little Planning Goes a Long Way

at Holiday Time

Furloughs and essential business trips will tax travel facilities during the holidays. To those who find it necessary to travel during this difficult season, we offer these suggestions:

Plan ahead. Discuss your trip with our representative... at the City Ticket Office, or passenger station. Our employees, though busy war workers, will always try to help make your trip more pleasant.

There is a mighty good reason why all of us must plan more carefully right now. This year, the ROCK ISLAND LINES' passenger traffic is almost six times as large as it was in 1939, yet war shortages have prevented our adding new coaches, diners and Pullmans to handle the year 'round increases, let alone the heavy holiday burden.

Allow flexibility in your plans as to dates of departure and arrival. A suggestion that you change to another day, or an earlier or later train, is just our way of trying to eliminate unnecessary discomfort for you.

We firmly believe that COOPERATION, given in the truly American manner, is the finest way to solve any problem.

As yesterday—and today—so tomorrow ROCK ISLAND'S sole purpose is to provide the finest in transportation
